Wee, Death in French Camps

Thousands Interned Give Up Hope, Lacking Nearly All Decencies of Life.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Starvation was blamed directly for "a certain number of deaths" in French internment camps in reports just received here by the American Friends service committee from its investigators abroad.
In some of the camps, specifically that at Gurs, near the Pyrenees, with a heterogeneous population of 14,000, an "unbearable atmosphere of human hopelessness" was reported, with "an intense desire to die" attributed to most of the older refugees.

"They will not fight any more; apathetic, they lie on their straw mattresses, often refusing food and waiting for the end," the Gurs account asserted. "Many of the older refugees are suffering from a similar attitude."

The report gave a vivid picture of the situation at that reception camp, with 30 physicians battling against the most primitive conditions against overwhelming odds to try to save the lives of the refugees. The rate resulting from lack of food and medicine and unhygienic living conditions, the physical resistance of most of the refugees already having been worn down through long suffering.

Enslaved by Privation.
The camp of Gurs, population of about 7,500, together with 2,000 men from St. Gaudens, had been recently to the life of camp but nevertheless entailed a "great privation," a group of recently interned foreigners resident in France and 500 women interned at Gurs since May.

There are about 500 children and 1,200 persons more than 70 years of age, ranging up to 106 years. Inmate and feeble-minded, as well as hospital patients and pensioners of old people's homes, were in the group taken from Baden to the camp.

The deaths at Gurs were placed at from 15 to 20 daily in November. The medical section of the report stated that:
"A large number of Gurs people are in a state of critical emaciation. They are completely 'disappeared.' They are thin, their skin is yellow, their eyes are sunken, their hair is falling out, their teeth are bleeding gums with teeth falling out. 'Heart troubles' are very numerous. A very great number of victims are to be found among the people with chronic sicknesses, and among them are convalescents of serious illnesses (there are still a certain number of convalescents from typhoid fever coming from St. Gaudens) who cannot be saved, and by lack of care for the efforts to save them."

Rats and Lice Menace.
"You other dangers preoccupy the doctors. These result from the lice, which are increasing with the whole camp, and the greater because there are no barracks (not instruments) for cleaning the people attacked. The role that lice play in the propagation of typhoid fever is well known.

"The presence of a great number of rats represents another source of infection."
In spite of the depressing conditions investigators reported that even at Gurs a "remarkable orchestra" had been formed with the aid of musical instruments given by a private organization. This was described as contributing "powerfully" to raising the morale of the prisoners.

From the camp of Argelos, on the Mediterranean just above the Spanish border, a Quaker investigator sent word to the camp adjutant, "a kindly man," was discouraged by doubling the number of internees as a result of the closing of the camp of Bram, some miles in the interior. Argelos last month, when the report was written, was described as "an unfortunate community of 18,000 men, women, and children."

76th Anniversary of Surrender Here Sees Park Service at Work on Re-creating a Typical Mid-19th Century Southern Town

Appomattox, Va., April 9.—Today is the seventy-sixth anniversary of the Surrender at Appomattox. Here on April 9, 1865, in the comfortable and comfortable of the McLean House, the Confederate army, led by Gen. Robert E. Lee, surrendered to the Union army, led by Gen. Ulysses S. Grant.

This important event occurred in a small village, Appomattox Court House, which today is a National Historic Monument. The site of the surrender was the McLean House, which was built in 1840 by W. H. Hancock, the local contractor hired to build the house. Hancock's heirs, who form the basis for the reconstruction, along with many wartime and other photographs, old drawings, and writings found by the historical staff of the Monument, Mr. Hubbard is still a resident of Lynchburg.

Archaeological investigation at the site of the McLean House has been underway since early spring. The purpose of this investigation is twofold: to check the Hancock-Hubbard drawings and specifications and to find new facts. The overall dimensions of the house, as worked out by the archaeologist, check almost to the inch with the Hancock-Hubbard data. New finds were to be expected because Hancock made the basement at all times.

After the completion of the archaeological investigation and the drawing of measured drawings, the actual reconstruction will begin. It is expected that this will be some time during the summer. Despite the general belief that practically all of the bricks were carried away by scavenger hunters, the CCC men have uncovered about 20,000, all carefully cleaned by the Historic Sites Division and placed in storage. Hancock's plan, and the collection of Mr. Hubbard's notes, which was born there after his grandfathers acquired the property from McLean, all point to a very accurate reconstruction. As much of the original brick as possible will be used and similar old brick will be acquired for the rest in order to make a completely faithful reproduction of the house where the stream of American History took a new turn on April 9, 1865.

Local Baseball Will Play First Game Next Saturday
The Appomattox Skyline League baseball will play its first pre-season game here Saturday, April 16, with the fine York Union Military Academy team.

After many weeks of ups and downs, the local Skyline League team has decided to stick in the Skyline League, which will open its season May 3. Appomattox won the league championship last year.

The roster of players at present is as follows:
Catcher, Nathan Goff
Pitcher, Louis Cola, Nurney Bond and Gordon Bragg
First base, Nat Reason
Second base, Harry Ewers
Short stop or third base, Tally Severs
Outfielders, Joe Overman, James S. Clair and Rick Hawkins
Utility, Nick Leftwich

Cola will be here to pitch a game on the weekend of May 17-18, and then will finish his school work and return here June 1st. Nurney Bond won and lost none for Craddock-Terry last year, and will pitch one game a week until he leaves the club on June 10, at which time another pitcher will be added.

It is believed that this year's Skyline League team will be even better than last year's and in fact, strong as any semi-pro team in the state.
